

I am writing with regard to the Inogen One. There is a critical need for improved access for patients who must travel on board aircraft with oxygen. The notice filed by the FAA does not currently include the Inogen One for use on board aircraft. Without completion of the FAA's review of the Inogen One and allowing it to be included on the list of approved devices, the ability for the patient to choose the oxygen supply that best suits his or her traveling needs is severely restricted. I am committed to actively seek approval for usage of the Inogen One on board aircraft. I believe this important ruling will provide oxygen users with the opportunity for greater independence and further expand the options available to them.

Sincerely yours,
Robert Maietta, MD
